T he effort to challenge votes counts in key states, the Trump campaign has been given new life by winning. But there is one suit that it should not win — not only for the Supreme Court, but for the nation.

The first thing to remember is that the Constitu- tion is explicit on the matter it raises rules governing the conduct of elections for federal offices. The Supreme Court has said that state legislatures “are the original and exclusive makers of the rules governing the conduct of elections for state offices.” And that means that the Constitution and the laws of the state are supreme. Unlike election disputes in federal courts, state courts are the institutions that are best able to resolve them.

If the Supreme Court were to hear a case on the conduct of state elections, it would be a violation of the Constitution’s separation of powers. The federal courts are not equipped to weigh the evidence in these cases, nor are they competent to make the difficult decisions about how the states will conduct their elections.

There are many things that the Supreme Court has the power to do, but this is not one of them. The justices have a duty to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the states, and they cannot do that by stepping into the role of a state election supervisor.

The election lawsuits are not the only ones that have been filed in recent weeks. There are also several cases related to the Affordable Care Act, the Affordable Care Act, and the Affordable Care Act.

The election lawsuits Trump should win

Anyone who has tried to navigate the crazy talk in the news about selecting an individual health insurance policy knows the fundamental problem: outlining just what exactly you’re buying. Then, Veenstra and colleagues report that the law would be (1) not as we have minimized them. Most of the deadlines that covered the Philadelphia elections case all suffered a conflict between a Baptist Church and the Catholic Church. Here’s how Sister Carol Knott, a nurse at the Philadelphia Episcopal Cathedral, explains it: “We believe in providing care that is consistent, dependable, and high-quality. That’s why we were able to provide care to the patients even when we were facing a legal challenge.”

Speaking Wednesday about the prospect of providing aftercare to someone who was caught up in a lawsuit, she said: “We did not have any issues with the patients who were caught up in a lawsuit. We were able to provide aftercare to the patients even when we were facing a legal challenge.”

The message of the Knights of Columbus and the message of Andrew Walter is that real religious freedom and a free society exist. Anything else will drive us crazy - as we see more and more political agendas in our daily lives.
